Excerpt: . . . had brought him to see the place. Well, says he to a country fellow, who had been his guide, where are these tuqintiriewadks which you told me of Then, alighting from his horse, and surveying the structure, which represents the ruin of a castle overgrown with ivy; Aye, says he, a very ancient place! Probably one of the castra restioa, or summer camps, of the Romans; some appendage to Cirencester, I suppose, which was one of the caktra hiberna, or winter stations, of the Roman legions. The castle itself was probably built during the barons wars, in the reign of Henry the third, or of King John. --Aha! look ye there now, says the keeper, smiling, so several gentlemen have thought: but, sir, I assure you, it was built by my present lord, but a few years ago; and his lordship used to say, he could have built it as old again if he had had a mind. --Built by my present lord! cries the gentleman, with a frown, and were there no ruins of a castle here before-- Not that I ever heard of, replies the keeper. --Well, for my part, says the stranger, I dont at all approve of these deceptions, which must necessarily mislead future antiquaries, and introduce great confusion into the English history. I dont wonder, continues the stranger, turning towards Wildgoose, that any gentleman should wish to have his woods or gardens adorned with these venerable Gothic structures, as they...
