Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: . which occur in varying numbers in institutions of this kind. That better work may be done it is necessary that the physicians have a more thorough acquaintance with the personal history and the details of the mental and physical condition of each patient, and that the number of attendants be such as to enable them to give more attention to patients needing special care, exercise or control. As a benefit from this expense might be expected some shortening of the period of detention of recoverable cases, an increased number of discharges, and a more accurate and complete basis for the selection of patients to do necessary work, and for judgment in the matter of discharging individual patients. This list of recommendations is large, but I would urgently advise putting and maintaining the hospital in good condition, in the belief that the propriety of doing so will be recognized in the future, if not now. The services of an oculist and a dentist would be valuable in many cases. The appointment of a staff of other specialists, to be consulted as required, would also be a valuable aid in the work, although with a sufficiently large staff of resident physicians their services might not often be required. During the past year the hospital has been honored by being visited by His Excellency, Governor Mead, and by representatives of various State Departments. Methodical visitation is considered of such value in some states that each hospital has its...
